A fermer edilor of the Montreal Witness religions (mresi), now resident in the South, writes to that paper a description of what he saw and heard in Richmond after the battle of Bull this letter, which details a chapter of horrers and suffarings among alled cross in the control of th writer declares, 'was a sad victory to the people of Richmond.' 'The loss of the Southern army was very much greater than was supposed at the North. I have heard Beanregard declare his be lief that three or four southerners fell to every northern soldier." "No sounds of rejicing were heard, such as ere usual after a victory." And then this eye-witness goes on to deecribe the teriores of the wounded, for where man C. T. thet, near Main whom no surgical ald was ready; who lay noon the battle-field unattended; were gathered up, placed in cars, and conveyed to Richmond, without surgical or medical attendance; and arrived at the hospitals there with their wounds not leeding but festering and rotting. The selfish arietocrets who anticed these delnded people to war against the nation cared little for any one e war against the nation cared little for any one e welfare but their own. It is a bitter experience the people of the South are making, but they McMarry, F., Main et al. "thead Sthets. cannot help but learn something of the inhumanity and the wicked selfishness of their usurping leaders from such scenes as this Canadian Editor describes, in the extract below, as occurring in Richmond, nearly one hundred miles from the Wilder, E., 488 Main et.

No pen can adequately describe the horrors of the 1 enes witnessed by anxious crowds, as day by day the wounded were brought in and carried to the houses of their friends or to the St.Charles. Hotels, which had been fitted up as a hospital. I question, indeed, whether many of the hattle-badds of Europe have been the arans of such horrible individual sufferings. I have read of no compaign, except that of Mescow, where the French coldiers perished by tans of thousands in every conceivable agent, that can offer a comparison in this respect. "My comparison refers only to the peculiar sufferings of the wounded, as day after day they were brought into the city in every conceivable and inconceivable condition of mutilation, and writhing in agent where mortification had not already supervened. "In most battle fields of modern times skilful surgeons and attentive nurses have been in prompt attendance, and the wounded have received every possible attention compatible with their unfortunate position; but, with the wounded of the Scuthern army at least, this was not the case.

" It is hard to decide which of these No pen can adequately describe the horrors of
